In which case, we don't know how it's going to be yet. Show spoiler (click to show) Been wondering too. I really don't see how it'd go to end with Fried and Rika on opposite sides. They've always loved each other though. Show spoiler (click to show) Those two, plus Rika's monster-like reaction to being told that Fried wouldn't tell her his true name, and the implication that it's far worse than Fried's curse implies, seems to be pointing to Fried having made some sort of Faustian bargain with the devil somewhere down the line. Rika can't seem to say it when they're in the same room because it seems to destroy her, but after that she said that it wasn't Fried, then saw Fried healed, and then the shot ended. Show spoiler (click to show) It was a Black Magic!! lol Quote: Her body was inside his coffin, and she's acting like she has a bad cold. She's just playing along. Quote: Fried and Rika were together. Rika's reaction there suggests that she's in love with Fried just as much as he is with her. Show spoiler (click to show) When she sees him healed, yes, but he's simply acting along with her. Quote: She didn't even ask what's wrong with his arm, she immediately started calling out to him. She might see through his disguise and she might not, but her desire to have him near her doesn't seem to be diminished in any way. I don't think she sees through him at all. Perhaps her belief that Fried wanted to trick her in some way stems from a reaction I've seen several times, where when suddenly seeing a
